10/10 Personal Branding (Increasingly Niche): Reel Series

Oct 28, 2026 · @jake

The format

Every part uses the same hook word for word. Only the PART number at the top, the five points and the CTA change. Each point is more niche than the one before, so the payoff is the last one.

The hook (locked): "10 out of 10 personal branding advice, but it gets increasingly more niche."

Beat	Time	What happens
Hook	0–1.5s	The locked line, said on the very first frame. At the top of the screen: PART X. Underneath: 10/10 BRAND ADVICE with a small "more niche" arrow.
Point 1	5–7s	Level 1, broad. Say the point, then the why in one line.
Point 2	5–7s	Level 2, strategy. Punch in 10–20% to show the level going up.
Point 3	5–7s	Level 3, content craft. Update the on-screen niche counter.
Point 4	5–7s	Level 4, filming and editing. Slow down slightly.
Point 5	6–8s	Level 5, ultra niche. Hold a beat before you say it.
CTA	about 3s	One ask only. Cut on the last word, with no outro.

Total length is 35–45 seconds, or about 110–125 spoken words.

Assembly: take one point from each level, 1 to 5. If all five points share a theme (trust, the edit, colour), the video feels deliberate. Mixing themes works too.

Edit notes: put the niche counter in the top 40% of the frame and the captions roughly halfway down. Use the same soft pop each time the level changes. Use a riser and hit once, before Level 5 only.

All points come from the Brand-building resources folder on Drive.

Point bank: Levels 1–4

Each point has two parts: the line (in bold) and the why after the arrow. Say both.

Level 1: Broad (anyone could say it, but it's true)

1. Decide what you want from your brand before you post another video. → Posting consistently with no destination can take you further away from it.
2. You already have a personal brand. → If you don't define it, your audience defines it for you, and you might not like the answer.
3. Optimise for trust, not reach. → A small audience of the right people out-earns a big audience of the wrong ones.
4. People buy from people. → A face, a voice and an opinion earn more trust than any logo.
5. Tell the story, not the adjective. → "Hard-working" is forgettable. The night you rebuilt a client's launch at 2am isn't.
6. Give way more than you ask. → Selling in every post reads as desperate.
7. Repeat your message until you're bored of it, then keep going. → You'll be sick of it long before your audience has heard it.
8. Real beats polished. → With AI content everywhere, a flawless aesthetic doesn't stand out any more.
9. Stop chasing virality. → It changes what you make and who you attract.
10. Be the expert or the student, and say which. → A student pretending to be an expert gets found out.
11. Show your losses, not just your wins. → A feed with only wins looks like a performance.
12. "I'm not a camera person" is a practice problem, not a personality trait. → Nobody starts out natural on camera.

Level 2: Strategy (more specific, still big-picture)

1. Do the buyer maths. → Monthly target divided by your price. If it's eight, you don't need 100k views. You need eight people to trust you.
2. Write a "won't be linked with" list. → A bad association costs you more than a good one earns. Most people skip this list.
3. Before any collab or trend, ask: if this became the most-seen thing I ever made, would I be glad? → If not, say no.
4. One topic per account, one viewer per video. → If you post about everything, the algorithm can't work out who to show you to.

5. Plan your content by job, not format: reach, trust, ask. → Most people skip trust content. It gets the fewest views and does the most work.
6. Only ask for the sale about twice a month. → Give each ask a reason why now: spaces open, a cohort date, a new service.
7. Write down ten things your industry says that you disagree with. → Circle the three you'd defend in front of a room. Those are your best hooks.
8. Name your method. → If it has a name, people can talk about it and recommend it.
9. Help people interpret their world, not just follow steps. → How-to content is everywhere. A new way of seeing the problem is what people follow.
10. Don't start your ideas from competitors' best posts. → You'll attract more people like them, not more clients.
11. Pick one hero platform plus email, and commit for six months. → Being on five platforms half-heartedly is how you go nowhere.
12. Name a series. → "Client question #12" tells people what they get if they follow, and you don't have to decide what to post every day.
13. Check your monthly stats in this order: enquiries, then saves, sends and comments that quote you. Views come last. → Slow growth with the right people means it's working.
14. Coin shared language for your audience. → Name the stages and stuck points they go through. People who use your words feel like they're part of something.
15. Sprint, then maintain. → Grow in 30–90 day pushes, then hold at one or two posts a week. Weeks with zero posts cost you.

Level 3: Content craft (the stuff you do every week)

1. Open with their problem, in their words, not your credentials. → "You've been posting for months and nobody's watching" beats "I'm a strategist with ten years' experience."
2. Steal your hooks from your DMs. → The exact phrases clients use, like "200-view jail", beat polished copy every time.
3. Every video should build one of four things: likability, admirability, credibility or trustability. → If it builds none, don't post it.
4. Write "how I", not "how to". → People hear "how to" all day. A personal result is easier to trust.
5. Pin three posts: who you help, proof, and your story or method. → New visitors decide whether to follow in seconds, and those three do the talking.
6. Your bio needs one line only you could write. → "I help X do Y" is clear but it isn't memorable. Keep the clarity and add the personality.

7. Mine your sales calls for doubts. → Answer one objection per video, before they've had a chance to raise it.
8. Swap every "and then" in your script for "but" or "so". → "And then" is a list. "But" and "so" make it a story.
9. Zoom into one moment. → "It was a hard year" is a summary. "Tuesday, 6am, sat in the van, thinking I can't pay Friday's wages" is a story.
10. State the stakes in the first 20 seconds. → No stakes means nothing is at risk, so nothing matters.
11. Write the last line first. → In short-form, make it lead back into the first line so the video loops.
12. Rule out the obvious answer early. → "It's not that you need more willpower" makes them lean in.
13. One idea a week becomes ten pieces of content: one long piece, one carousel, three shorts and a few stories. → Most people never see everything, so repurposing isn't repeating yourself.
14. Film three shorts from the same idea with three hook types: a warning, a positive and a story. → Same idea, three chances to land.
15. If you use AI on a script, ask it what to cut, not what to write. → If it writes the script, you'll sound like everyone else.
16. Mark your two asks in the calendar first. → Then fill the days before each one with trust content that sets it up.

Level 4: Filming and editing tactics (now it's getting specific)

1. Your hook needs to land by 1.5 seconds, not 3. → The median scroll-stop on TikTok is 1.9 seconds, and UK viewers are even faster.
2. Interrupt first, then add meaning. → Frame one breaks the feed's rhythm with motion, an angle, a prop or a sound. The words come second.
3. Pause at 0.5 seconds with the sound off. → If you can't tell what the video's about, neither can the viewer.
4. Put your payoff in the back half. → If the answer arrives in the first 15 seconds, the rest is dead air.
5. Delete every line before your first real claim. → "Hi, so today I want to talk about" goes. Every time.
6. Don't cut every pause. → Keep the breath before your big line and the odd "um". If you sand every take smooth, you sound synthetic.
7. Something should change on screen every five seconds or so. → If eight seconds pass with nothing new, add a punch-in, a cutaway or a keyword.

8. Only punch in on the lines that matter. → If you punch in on every sentence, it stops meaning anything.
9. B-roll should extend what you're saying, not repeat it. → Saying "phone" and showing a phone adds nothing. Show what happens next.
10. No outro. → Cut on the last word of the payoff. "Thanks for watching" is where people swipe.
11. Build your own sound kit: three or four sounds, in every video. → People will start recognising your videos by ear.
12. Use a riser and hit once, before your single biggest moment. → You only get to cry wolf once.
13. Choose two signature elements that are in every frame. → A colour, a mic, glasses. Start from what you already wear so it never feels like a costume.
14. Change your set if it looks like everyone else's. → If every competitor has the same shelf and coloured lights, you blend in.
15. Batch the first two weeks before day one of a sprint. → Starting a sprint with nothing banked is how you burn out by week three.
16. Carousels: slides two and three each have to work as a hook on their own. → Instagram can show someone slide two on a later visit, so it needs to stop people too.

Point bank: Level 5, ultra niche

There are 79 points here, grouped by theme. These are the "how do you even know that" points that close each part. The benchmark figures are quoted from the playbooks, so check them before you state them on camera as fact.

Filming

1. Lock your exposure on your phone, then drag it down a touch. → Press and hold on your face, then slide the brightness down. A dark shot can be lifted, but a blown-out one is gone for good.
2. Never mix daylight with household bulbs. → You get one orange cheek and one blue cheek, and no slider can fix both.
3. Wear mid-tones on camera, not pure white or pure black. → White blows out and black turns into a black hole.
4. Turn HDR off when you film talking heads. → It often exports washed out or far too bright on other people's phones.
5. Film every clip for one video in the same spot, at the same time of day. → Matching clips later is the slowest job in colour.

Colour and grading

1. Correct first, grade second. → A stylish filter on uncorrected footage just gives you a stylish version of the problem.
2. Grade with your screen at 70% brightness. → If your screen's turned up, your video looks too dark on everyone else's phone.
3. Turn on the scopes in CapCut. → Your eyes get used to an orange picture within seconds. The scopes don't.
4. When you set white balance, drag the slider way past the right point, then come back. → It's much easier to find the centre from both sides than to creep towards it.
5. Tint needs much smaller moves than Temp. → A couple of points on Tint is the difference between healthy and sickly.
6. Balance off something that should be white. → The whites of your eyes, a wall or a sheet of paper. If that looks white, the rest follows.
7. Don't push sliders past about 15. → On well-lit phone footage, most settings land between −15 and +15. If you're at 50, something's wrong.
8. The grey mush trap: highlights right down and shadows right up flattens everything. → If either one's past about 30, go back and fix exposure instead.
9. To brighten your face, add one point in the middle of the curve and lift it, instead of raising exposure. → Your face gets brighter and the highlights don't blow out.
10. Pin the curve before you pull it. → Click a point in the middle and one in the highlights first, or the whole line bends and tints everything.
11. Healthy skin sits on one line on the vectorscope, whatever your skin tone. → If your skin leans green, add magenta. If it leans red, add green.
12. Skin looking like fake tan? Go to HSL, pick orange, take saturation down 5–15 and lightness up 5–10. → It fixes your skin without dulling the rest of the room.
13. Watch your wooden desk when you fix your skin in HSL. → Anything orange or red in the frame moves with your skin.
14. Never shift an HSL hue more than about 15. → Go further and you get patchy, banded edges. If you need more than that, it's a white balance problem.
15. Dark skin looking ashy? The camera underexposed you to protect a bright background. → Lift the midtones with a curve, add a touch of orange saturation and keep contrast gentle.
16. Make your brand colour pop with HSL. → Pick it with the picker, add 10–20 saturation and leave everything else alone.
17. Lower the saturation of greens, yellows and blues slightly. → Your skin becomes the most colourful thing in the frame, and it instantly looks more premium.

18. Colour wheels: move the dot a few millimetres, no more. → Cool shadows, warm highlights. Never the other way round on skin.
19. Put every filter at 30–40%, never 100. → At full strength it looks like a filter. At 30% it looks like good footage.
20. There are two kinds of LUT: conversion and creative. → Using a conversion LUT on normal footage is why most LUTs look terrible.
21. Set CapCut's auto colour correction to 70–80%, then finish by hand. → At 100% it's a guess. At 75% it's a good starting point.
22. Fake a face light in CapCut. → Duplicate the clip, add +5 to +12 exposure on the copy, then circle-mask it over your face and feather it heavily.
23. Push the background back: invert your face mask and drop exposure −8 to −15 on the copy. → The background recedes and you come forward.
24. Do your masks last, after the edit is locked. → Trim the clip afterwards and the masked copy falls out of line and leaves a ghost.
25. Vignette between 5 and 15. → If you can see a ring, it's too much.
26. Clarity no higher than 8, and sharpen at 0 (5 at most). → Clarity is unflattering on skin above that, and over-sharpened video looks cheap.
27. Add 3–10 grain. → It hides compression blocks and smooths skin slightly.
28. Save your grade as a preset named after where you film. → "Studio corner, daylight". Use it on everything for three months, because a look becomes a brand through repetition.

Editing, captions and sound

1. Your payoff should land 55–85% of the way through a short. → If it comes before that, the back half is dead.
2. Cut 1.5 to 2 seconds after the payoff appears. → Any longer and it feels like it's winding down, so people swipe.
3. Keep text out of the top, right edge and bottom of the frame. → That's where the buttons and captions sit. Graphics go in the top 40%, captions about halfway down.
4. Captions: one to six words per screen, and one emphasis style for the whole video. → Three colours and two fonts in your captions looks cheap.
5. Every graphic should either move in or land with a sound. → Nothing should just appear from nowhere.
6. Ease every animation, never linear. → Linear motion is what makes a graphic look like a template.
7. Desaturate icons and objects you import. → They sit inside your palette instead of looking pasted on.

8. If a sound effect repeats close together, shift the pitch slightly each time. → The same pop at the same pitch on every cut sounds robotic.
9. For a big moment, layer three sounds: a low, a mid and a high. → One sound on its own sounds thin.
10. Match the sound to the picture. → Digital blips for screens, natural sounds outdoors, darker sounds for darker shots.
11. Lower the mid frequencies of your music under your voice, not just the volume. → That's where speech sits. Then every word is clear on a phone speaker.
12. Cut the music dead before the line that matters. → The silence puts a spotlight on the next sentence.
13. Fitting a long track to a short video: reverse the first beat for a lead-in, then cut just before a beat and let the reverb ring out. → It sounds like the track was made for the video.
14. In long-form, make the music louder and quicker in the first 15 seconds, then pull it back. → Energy at the start, room to think after.
15. In long-form, change the layout every 20–40 seconds: face, B-roll, graphic, back to face. → Jump cuts alone can still feel stuck in one layout.
16. In long-form, save one deliberate 30–60 second hold straight to camera, in the last quarter. → After all the cutting, the stillness makes the verdict land.

Hooks and ads

1. Meta counts a hook view at 3 seconds. TikTok counts it at 2. → Never compare hook rates across the two.
2. On Meta, a hook rate under 20–25% means the hook needs fixing. → 30–45% is good and 45%+ is exceptional.
3. Only judge hook rate against the same audience temperature. → Cold audiences average about 22% and warm about 36%, so a great hook rate on retargeting means nothing.
4. Hold rate is ThruPlays divided by 3-second plays. → 40–50% is average and 60%+ is strong. A great hook with a bad hold is still a bad ad.
5. Start a story ad with a small natural movement. → Getting into the car, propping the phone up, tying your hair back. A real moment beats a flashy edit.
6. Write 3–5 versions of an ad where only the hook changes. → Otherwise you don't know what actually made the difference.

Carousels

1. Carousel covers: three colours, two fonts and one layout, fixed for good. → A fourth strong colour is where covers start looking messy.
2. Build your carousel slides at double size. → 2160 × 2700 instead of 1080 × 1350 gives you noticeably crisper text.
3. Tighten the letter spacing on carousel headlines. → It's the cheapest way to make a cover look designed.
4. Darken the photo on your cover. → The text has to be the focus, not the background.
5. Shrink your carousel cover to thumbnail size before posting. → If you can't read it there, nobody's swiping.
6. Teaching carousels should be 6–10 slides. → Under 5 rarely gives people enough to save it.
7. If a slide needs more than about 25 words, split it. → A wall of text throws away the one advantage carousels have.
8. Add music to carousels. → It's widely reported to push them into Explore, and it costs nothing.

Algorithm and profile

1. Sends drive reach to non-followers. Likes drive reach to followers. → If you want new people, make something people send to a friend.
2. Repost other people's content 10+ times in 30 days and you get left out of recommendations. → Make your own.
3. Search your topic on the platform and write down the suggested search phrases. → Save the top posts for each phrase into their own folder. That's your content bank.
4. Put your search phrase in the bold name line of your profile, not just the bio. → It's what the platform reads first when matching you to searches.
5. Personal posts with a link get about 27% fewer impressions. → Put the link in the comments or your profile instead.
6. Keep the first hour after posting free to reply to comments. → Then don't judge the post in its first two hours.
7. Posts that ask a question get about 77% more comments. → End on a real question, not "thoughts?"
8. Archive anything in your first nine posts that doesn't fit the brand. → That's what a new visitor actually sees.
9. Google your own name and close or update your old profiles. → A 2019 bio that says something different costs you trust.

10. Show your profile to someone in your audience for 10 seconds, then ask who it's for. → If they can't answer, rewrite your name line and bio.

Scripting

1. Aim for four "but" turns in the first 30 seconds. → That's what one top-performing short had. Each turn resets attention.
2. Write one sentence per line. If the right-hand edge looks level, vary the lengths. → Same-length sentences sound like you're reading.
3. Show the emotion on your body instead of labelling it. → "I leaned back and breathed out" beats "I was relieved."
4. Name the location in a few words. Don't describe it. → "I'm in the stockroom" is enough.
5. Script at about 150 words a minute. → A 45-second teaching video is roughly 115–125 words.
6. In long-form, put your second-strongest point first and your strongest second. → Value that keeps rising keeps people watching.

CTA bank

Use one CTA per part. Several asks in one video means none of them happen.

1. "Comment BRAND and I'll send you the full workbook."
2. "Follow, because next time it gets even more niche."
3. "Follow for part [next number]."
4. "Save this. Level five is the one you'll need later."
5. "Want this done for you? Link in bio for a game plan chat."
6. "Comment NICHE and I'll send you the next five."
7. "Send this to the friend who keeps saying they're 'not a camera person'."
8. "Which level got you? Comment the number."

Ready-to-film parts

There are 12 parts, each fully scripted and running from Level 1 to Level 5. They all open with the locked hook, with PART X at the top of the screen.

Part 1: The mixed bag

Hook: 10 out of 10 personal branding advice, but it gets increasingly more niche.

1. Optimise for trust, not reach. A small audience of the right people out-earns a big audience of the wrong ones.
2. Do the buyer maths. Monthly target divided by your price. If it's eight, you need eight people to trust you, not 100k views.
3. Steal your hooks from your DMs. Your clients' exact words beat polished copy every time.
4. Don't cut every pause. Keep the breath before your big line, or you'll sound like a robot.
5. Never mix daylight with household bulbs. You get one orange cheek and one blue cheek, and no editing app can fix both.

CTA: Follow, because next time it gets even more niche.

Part 2: All about trust

Hook: 10 out of 10 personal branding advice, but it gets increasingly more niche.

1. People buy from people. A face and an opinion beat any logo.
2. Plan content by job: reach, trust, ask. Trust content gets the fewest views and does the most work.
3. Mine your sales calls for doubts, and answer one per video before they've had a chance to raise it.
4. Show the proof on screen. Darken everything except the part that matters, then circle it.
5. Lower the saturation of the greens, yellows and blues in your shot slightly, so your skin is the most colourful thing in frame. It instantly reads as more premium.

CTA: Save this. Level five is the one you'll need later.

Part 3: All about the edit

Hook: 10 out of 10 personal branding advice, but it gets increasingly more niche.

1. Real beats polished. With AI content everywhere, a flawless look doesn't stand out any more.
2. Repeat your message until you're bored of it, because your audience still hasn't heard it.
3. Swap every "and then" in your script for "but" or "so". That's the difference between a list and a story.
4. No outro. Cut on the last word. "Thanks for watching" is where people swipe.
5. If a sound effect plays a few times close together, shift the pitch slightly each time. The same pop on every cut sounds robotic.

CTA: Comment NICHE and I'll send you the next five.

Part 4: All about your profile

Hook: 10 out of 10 personal branding advice, but it gets increasingly more niche.

1. You already have a personal brand. If you don't define it, your audience will.
2. One topic per account. If you post about everything, the algorithm can't place you.
3. Pin three posts: who you help, proof, and your story or method.
4. Your bio needs one line only you could write. "I help X do Y" is clear but it isn't memorable.
5. Put your search phrase in the bold name line of your profile, not just the bio. That's what the platform reads first.

CTA: Which level got you? Comment the number.

Part 5: All about the camera

Hook: 10 out of 10 personal branding advice, but it gets increasingly more niche.

1. "I'm not a camera person" is a practice problem, not a personality trait.
2. Pick two things that are in every single frame, like a colour, a mic or glasses. That's how people recognise you mid-scroll.
3. Change your set if it looks like everyone else's in your industry.
4. Your hook needs to land by 1.5 seconds. The median scroll-stop is 1.9, and UK viewers are even faster.
5. Lock your exposure on your phone and drag it down a touch. A dark shot can be saved, but a blown-out one can't.

CTA: Send this to the friend who keeps saying they're "not a camera person".

Part 6: All about consistency

Hook: 10 out of 10 personal branding advice, but it gets increasingly more niche.

1. Stop chasing virality. It changes what you make and who you attract.
2. Sprint, then maintain. Push for 30 to 90 days, then hold at one or two posts a week.
3. One idea a week becomes ten pieces of content: one long piece, one carousel, three shorts.
4. Build a sound kit of three or four sounds, used in every video. People will recognise you by ear.
5. Save your colour grade as a preset named after where you film, and use it on everything for three months. A look becomes a brand through repetition.

CTA: Comment BRAND and I'll send you the full workbook.

Part 7: The colour one

Hook: 10 out of 10 personal branding advice, but it gets increasingly more niche.

1. Be the expert or the student, and say which. A student pretending to be an expert gets found out.
2. Write down ten things your industry says that you disagree with. Circle three. Those are your hooks.
3. Write "how I", not "how to". A personal result is easier to trust.
4. Pause your video at half a second with the sound off. If you can't tell what it's about, nobody can.
5. Skin looking like fake tan? HSL, orange, saturation down 5 to 15, lightness up 5 to 10. Your skin's fixed and the room doesn't change.

CTA: Follow for part 8.

Part 8: The story one

Hook: 10 out of 10 personal branding advice, but it gets increasingly more niche.

1. Show your losses, not just your wins. A feed with only wins looks like a performance.
2. Name your method. If it has a name, people can recommend it.
3. Zoom into one moment. "It was a hard year" is a summary. "Tuesday, 6am, sat in the van" is a story.
4. Your B-roll should show what happens next, not repeat what you just said.
5. Aim for four "but" turns in your first 30 seconds. Every turn resets attention.

CTA: Save this. Level five is the one you'll need later.

Part 9: The algorithm one

Hook: 10 out of 10 personal branding advice, but it gets increasingly more niche.

1. Give way more than you ask. Selling in every post reads as desperate.
2. Pick one platform plus email and commit for six months.
3. State the stakes in the first 20 seconds. If nothing's at risk, nothing matters.
4. Batch two weeks of content before day one of a sprint, or you'll burn out by week three.
5. Sends drive reach to new people. Likes only drive reach to your followers. Make something people send to a friend.

CTA: Send this to someone who needs it.

Part 10: The carousel one

Hook: 10 out of 10 personal branding advice, but it gets increasingly more niche.

1. Tell the story, not the adjective. "Hard-working" is forgettable.
2. Check enquiries first every month, then saves and sends. Views come last.
3. Mark your two sales asks in the calendar first, then build the trust content around them.
4. Slides two and three of a carousel each need to work as a hook on their own. Instagram can show them first.
5. Build your slides at double size, 2160 by 2700, and tighten the letter spacing on the headline. It instantly looks designed.

CTA: Comment NICHE and I'll send you the next five.

Part 11: The ads one

Hook: 10 out of 10 personal branding advice, but it gets increasingly more niche.

1. Decide what you want from your brand before you post another video.
2. Before any trend or collab, ask: if this became the most-seen thing I ever made, would I be glad?
3. Rule out the obvious answer early. "It's not that you need more willpower" makes people lean in.
4. Interrupt first, then add meaning. Your first frame breaks the feed with motion, an angle or a prop.
5. Meta counts a hook view at 3 seconds, TikTok at 2. If you're comparing hook rates across the two, you're comparing nothing.

CTA: Follow for part 12.

Part 12: The polish one

Hook: 10 out of 10 personal branding advice, but it gets increasingly more niche.

1. People buy from people. Put your face on it.
2. Coin names for the stages your audience goes through. People who use your words feel like insiders.
3. Steal your bio's personality line from how you actually talk, not from LinkedIn.
4. Every graphic should move in or land with a sound. Nothing just appears.
5. For your biggest moment, layer three sounds: a low, a mid and a high. One sound on its own sounds thin.

CTA: Which level got you? Comment the number.

Before you film each part

- [ ] The hook is word for word the same as every other part, and it's the first thing said.
- [ ] PART X is at the top of the screen and matches the posting order.
- [ ] Level 5 is clearly more niche than Level 1. If you could swap them round, rework it.
- [ ] Every point has a why, not just the instruction.
- [ ] There's only one CTA, and it fits the topic.
- [ ] It runs to 45 seconds or less, which is about 125 words at most.
- [ ] You'd be glad if this were the video you're known for.
